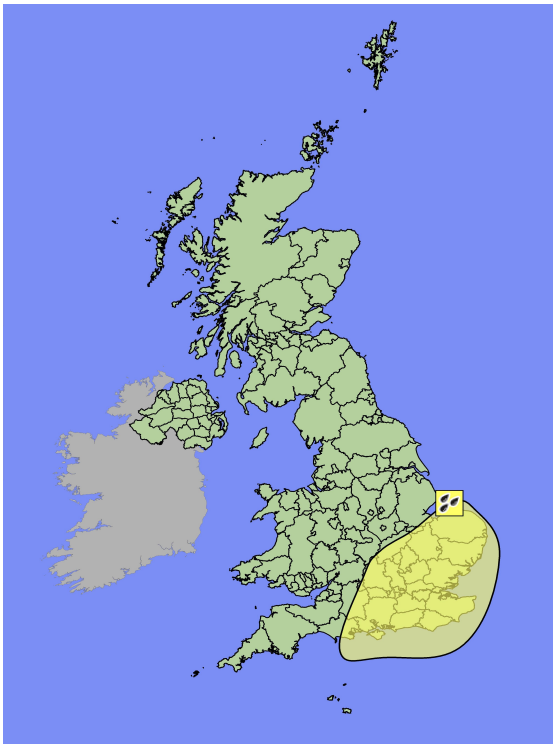
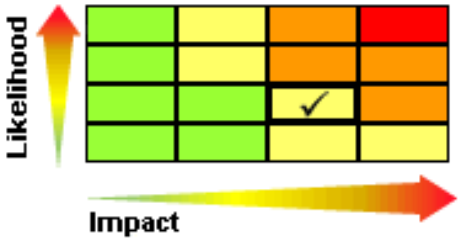
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
We continue to monitor a weather system coming up from Spain and over northern France, which is expected to give an area of heavy, thundery showers as well as some more prolonged rain. At this stage the track and intensity of the system is uncertain, though the potential exists for 30-50 mm within a period of 6 hours or so, and a risk of isolated 60 mm or more.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 00:00 on Tue, 23rd Aug 2011 until 15:00 on Tue, 23rd Aug 2011

Outbreaks of heavy rain are expected to spread into southern counties of England on Monday evening, turning locally heavy and thundery over parts of the SE half of England during early Tuesday morning. Whilst many parts will see relatively modest rainfall amounts, the public should be aware that surface water flooding and frequent lightning is possible locally.
